

Saddle Research Group Survey Launch

Your chance to take part in groundbreaking research

The Saddle Research Group is a multi-disciplinary research team of scientists and equine industry professionals investigating the influence of saddles on the welfare, performance and safety of horses. The aim of the project is to extensively research and develop the next generation of performance saddles.

“This is one of the most under-estimated issues affecting all levels of the equestrian population - from recreational cob to Olympic athlete. By taking part in this survey horse owners and riders have a unique opportunity to influence ground breaking research” says Anne Bondi BHSI, international rider and trainer.

The results of this initial survey will contribute to the ongoing work of the Saddle Research Group. The results will be published in the autumn.
